THE FABLE OF A STONE AGE ROMEO

In the rugged stone age period our friend Farmer Al. Falfa lives the life of a real adventurer. He steers what appears to be a heavy-timbered boat dexteriously over the waves. But the boat is really his faithful Dinosaur pup, Danny. On land, Danny scampers along like any other playful pup. In the stone age country the women are as rugged as the men. Graceful Wildrose Rockybilt, a maid of mere 18, is the proud possessor of Ted, a playful tiger which she keeps in a granite garage. Over hill and dale does our Wildrose drive her striped steed. All the best tricks of our modern day circus equestriennes are eclipsed by the riding feats of Wildrose. After a lively ride, Wildrose high-dives from a cliff into the sea. Heraquatic skill ranks her among the champion bathing girls of the world. But Tim Turtle puts a pinch in her performance when he nips her toe. A terrific struggle ensues and Wildrose, brave as she is, has to cry for help. Now it happens, that Farmer Al, perched upon Danny Dinosaur's head is picking cocoanuts from the uppermost limbs of tall trees and feeding them to his steed. No sooner does the cry reach Al's ears, than he spurs Danny into high-speed and makes for the scene of trouble. Danny catapults Al out into the briny deep, near the spot where Wildrose is struggling. Al succeeds in rescuing the girl and places her upon a rock to rest, while he rests on another. The moment she comes to, her wild nature is dominant and when Al smitten by love at first sight, speaks of marriage she promptly knocks him head first into the water. She repeats this several times and then swims away with Al in pursuit. Reaching the foot of a highcliff, Wildrose grabs the tail of her tiger, Ted, and he pulls her up the face of the cliff. Al Follows at high-speed. Danny is reclining on the edge of the cliff like a rugged mountain, and as soon as Al sets foot upon him he jumps up and prances after Wildrose and her tiger. The girl races to her home, a tall lighthouse type of structure. Al climbs upon Danny's head and he is lifted up to her window, but she pushes him down. Thorn Rockybilt, her father, comes out and tells Al that if he wants Wildrose all he has to do is go in after her. Al does as suggested but comes flying out, with eyes black and blue. Wildrose dances out and handing Al a club, says, "Beat me dear I am yours". But Al changes his mind about love and runs away into the distance.

Moral: He who lives and runs away lives to fight another day.
